2022 Seminar Series

International Market Expansion for Exporters

Should your Company Invest Resources in Product Certifications?

Thursday, March 31, 2022 8:30 AM to 10:00 AM

EVENT SUMMARY

You want to grow your international sales. As part of your analysis of potential new markets for your products, you need to factor the cost and resources needed to have those products certified to comply with different countries' quality and safety regulations. Are those costs worthwhile? Do you understand what your organization needs to do to meet their requirements? – and most importantly - What is your Return on Investment? This seminar will focus on the business case for obtaining product regulatory certifications in the Americas, the EU, Russia, China and other Asian countries. Participants will learn the synergies between different regulatory certifications, what questions to ask before investing company resources to have their products certified for sales in international markets and how to minimize the costs needed to qualify those products for the largest number of international quality and safety requirements.

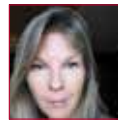

WHO SHOULD ATTEND?

- Business Managers and Executives responsible for international market development
- Manufacturers, distributors and service companies interested in entering specific markets around the world
- Companies contracting to manufacture products in other countries for worldwide distribution

ON THE AGENDA

- Overview of product safety and quality certification requirements in the Americas, the European Union, Russia, China and major Asian countries
- How to evaluate the ROI to obtain certification approvals for your products in specific markets around the world
- Synergies of technical work performed to comply with different countries' product certifications and how to leverage them to minimize international expansion costs.
